

1.6.2 Preview

We have a new request from the folks at Run Buddy. The sales team wants us to build a contact section (called Reach Out) that invites visitors to ask questions or voice concerns. Like the sign-up form on the homepage, it's also another opportunity to generate sales leads.

Just like we always do, let's start by looking at the mock-up:

Here's a quick look at the build process, which (as usual!) starts with adding the HTML and then the styling:

1. Build the map. You'll embed code from Google Maps to add an interactive map to the contact section.
2. Create the contact info. You'll add Run Buddy's contact info using a new `<address>` element and a special URL for the company's email address.
3. Add some class. Use CSS to set the correct background colors and text alignment.
4. Add styles to the `<iframe>` and contact info. You'll use CSS instead of HTML attributes to define the `<iframe>`'s dimensions.
5. Design a two-column layout. You'll learn how to target multiple, different selectors with a single CSS rule.
