4   Introduction to Module 4

Web APIs

This week, you'll learn about application programming interfaces, or APIs, which allow web developers to create dynamic, interactive web applications. Sometimes an API lets us interact with the page more easily. Other times, an API lets us send and retrieve data from other services, such as GitHub. In this module, you'll look at a few of the most important APIs built directly into the browser, beginning with the Document Object Model.

Watch this video to learn more about what to expect this week: