1.4.7   Reflection

This lesson gave us a chance to practice many of the CSS properties we previously learned to finish a pretty large chunk of the layout—the "What We Do" and "What You Do" sections. Along the way, we better organized our style sheet with reusable class names and learned a few new bits of HTML and CSS.

The next lesson, Meet the Trainers, will further test our skills with a more complicated layout. But first let's bask in what we accomplished here:

- We used `<img>` elements to display SVG images.

- We used `` elements to highlight inline content.

- We centered non-text content using `margin: 0 auto` and `text-align`.

- We combined classes on the same element (e.g., `<h2 class="section-title primary-border">`).

Keep these ideas in your back pocket because they will surely come up again, not only in the next few lessons but in future web-related projects!
